I didn't in any way intimate that I condoned their behavior.Just like they know they're doing something wrong when they shoot deer out of season or go into someone's barnyard and slaughter one of their cows or pigs when they're not home. We're talking about people who live back in the hills and live off the land in any way they can. What would you have proposed I do about it? Back then, they couldn't even get a game warden to do anything but drive around on the main roads once a month or so. Nobody does or says much about such incidents because they're afraid of the repercussions.

I meant learning of "this news" was hard to take, I.E "you're killing me"..

There haven't been any expectations put on you by me. I was merly asking an opinon from you. Are the perpetrators aware of the fact that they broke the law?

People have to eat, and I can certainly understand that. At the same time we're a nation of laws..If someone wants to change the law, then they should organize themselves aroud a cause and vote on it..

Troutbert,

I for one am less interested in groups and more interested in laws. Individuals broke the law, and in that act, terminated protected species, this is wrong.
