Subject: : Conservation
Topic: : HomeWaters Club- different name, same agenda
Re: HomeWaters Club- different name, same agenda
Author: : JustFish
Date: : 2011/1/7 16:32:59
URL:

Quote:

> MKern wrote:
> They are big city lawers, doctors, and congressmen who have more money than skill.
>
> They don't care about the "little guy" and just want trophy pictures to show their office buddies.
>
> It's all about being part of an elite club. What sport is more elite than fly fishing (polo maybe; but who plays that anymore).
>
> I know a guy who fishes there every year, gets in with a friend, he is a good fly angler. I don't know why he goes though.

This explanation that makes sense to me.

It's not about the best trout waters, it's about the "ELITE" status they get for being in this club. It's the same reason why my filthy rich Uncle buys $900,000 dollar town homes on golf courses here and in Florida with a private club. He's "JO" by the way(It's not hard to figure out the abrv). He does it so he can hang out with other "JO's" like himself. He feels like he is above people and doesn't have to mix with the "little guy."

Then when the club brings in a household name like Lefty Kreh or Joe Humphrey's the club members now have one more thing to brag about. They can get a picture for their office with Lefty Kreh in the water with them stream side. Then when the VP of operations that fly fishes in Europe comes to town He can then take him to his "Elite" club and have wine and cheese stream side while they play grab ass with each other.

It's about status not good water.