Subject: : Conservation
Topic: : Back against the well or wall as they say.
Re: Back against the well or wall as they say.
Author: : Gudgeonville
Date: : 2011/7/26 5:21:37
URL:

Ron Gullas claims were investigated by the DEP early on. It was determined that the drilling did not affect his pond or his property. He did not agree with the science that proved that he was wrong and started his campaign against drilling. Ron Gulla was not a farmer. Ron Gulla was a landowner that made a very good living selling small construction equipment to the drilling industry. He also signed an agreement with the company that he eventually had a falling out with. I see and hear the hysteria everyday here in southwest pa. A couple of years ago, when Ron Gulla was in the news, there were claims that a certain stream in Washington county was emptied by Marcellus drillers. That never happened either. Just a lot of bad information out there on the internet. There is some truth, but this isn't the mining industry of the 1960's - 70's. The drilling for the most part is being done in an efficient manner with the environment and safety the number one priorities.

I apologize for lurking so long before speaking up and I do have an interest in this industry. I am a lifelong resident of PA and being involved with all aspects of drilling gas and oil wells for over 30 years, I do know a little bit about the industry. I am not seeing what is being reported on the internet, and I surely know a little about the way reporters are dealing with it.