Subject: : Gear Talk
Topic: : Tenkara, now everybody will want one
Re: Tenkara, now everybody will want one
Author: : Smike
Date: : 2012/7/13 9:19:13
URL:

Quote:

> joseywales wrote:
> Well then grab a pole and a worm and have it. He doesn't just want to catch fish, he wants to catch fish on his terms, as we all do, whatever those terms are (and they change at times). Lots of guys fly fish for trout, but spin for bass. They could fly for bass, but they choose not to. It's about choices and I think the gun industry has shown us that.

Correct, we all do just about 99.99% of the things we do for our own reasons and always wanting to do them on our own terms. (even when we say we are doing it for someone else) This isn't any 3rd rate country here.

My terms have changed from stick, line and worm when I was 6. They have been become pretty strict based on C+R premise. (i.e leave things the way they were when you got there, and still swimming.) Tenkara fits that, so it’s another tool in the shed. It’s entertaining in arguing this vs. that when it comes to it, unless you want to toss around a worm on the end, but that’s entirely different debate and each to their own.

I can’t tell anyone how there life is gonna change if they just pop some sakasa and wash it down with some kebari. I’m sure thou, that it can’t be as entertaining as throwing down a hand full of stumble biscuts…