As has been the case most of this fall, I've been busy lately, but found time this week to put together a video. I took the best clips I have from the past three years, organized them by stream, and did some basic editing. No music, music in a fishing video either ruins it or makes it depending on your taste, and that's not the point. This video isn't flashy and doesn't even tell a story, really. It's just a bunch of clips of me doing what I love most- poking around some really tiny streams and finding a few surprises.

I posted a video in the past, and was blasted for my handling of the fish in the video (even though the fish was absolutely fine). If you are concerned about anything you see here, that's fine, just be respectful! Purists beware, there are two spin fishing scenes in here.

Here's the video (youtube link). Watch in HD if your computer can handle it. It is 8 minutes long, I'll forgive you if you can't sit through the whole thing

For you guys who were checking out the thread about finding brookie streams, this should provide some motivation! All 7 of the streams in this video are within 15 minutes of my house, and only one is on the natural reproduction list. They're out there! Maybe you can pick up on some strategies as well (although my bow-and-arrow casting is pretty awful in a couple places).
