Subject: : Fly Fishing Locations
Topic: : Mainstem Delaware
Re: Mainstem Delaware
Author: : geebee
Date: : 2013/1/19 19:11:24
URL:

Quote:

> afishinado wrote:
>
> Rivers in the U.K. have been maintained (cleared of debris, snags and obstructions) by private landowners for thousands of years. Today, the rivers are similarly maintained by the government. This affords the night angler relatively safe conditions in which to pursue these very wary fish. Free of major obstructions and snags, the only cover the sea run trout have are in deep pools and undercut banks. With this minimal cover they are still very difficult to catch..[/i] utter crap. I lived in the UK for 35 years and have NEVER seen any streams other than the chalkstreams like the Test, Itchen, Ribble etc that have had any improvements made. no rivers are maintained by the UK Government at all.

99% of the best sea trout rivers are in Wales, Scotland, Devon or Cornwall, and vary from rivers half a mile wide to ones you could pole vault across.

they are very wild places - the trick is to arrive the day or morning before, check out access, measure out your cast and figure your wade in and wade out.

i fish the Bandon river every june and we have to walk two miles to the river through woods and pasture.

our angling club of 35 members catch 2,000 fish a year from May to season close in September.

difficult to catch, my ass.

and you don't need to find their hiding places - you just cast at the splashes and hang on