Not to contribute to the "fecal storm", but the picture of the fish that I posted from the McMichael's may indeed be a tiger trout. I never even noticed, since it doesn't look much like the pics of tiger trout I've seen before. The giveaway is the squiggly markings on the upper side of the fish that look Brookie-esque. The PFBC says that they sometimes stock tigers when they stock brookies, and the McMichael's was stocked with brookies a few weeks before I caught that fish this year. Kudos to all that caught my mistake. I picked that picture because that fish had the stubby fins and freshly clipped adipose fin that are common on freshly stocked fish. There IS actually a wild version of the tiger trout, but they are very rare. Do a Google search for tiger trout - interesting stuff. If you look carefully enough, you may even see a picture of our very own PA Trout VP, Chaz McDonald, holding a tiger trout. 🏆
