It might be just be me, but I tend to think that difficult or occasionally moody or mercurial employees in independent fly shops are a part of the overall charm of the places. Up to a certain point, anyway. I generally don't hold them to the same customer service standards or expectations as I would a sales guy at Macy's or the local Ford dealer. Most of them don't have extensive retail training in the care and feeding of the (often) difficult, moody and mercurial public.

If it gets bad enough, I vote with my feet and go elsewhere...

To the fellow from Jamestown: My Grandparents lived there and we made the trip from southern Erie County up to see them about once every other month. Its too bad my Mom isn't around any more. She was a real spitfire and probably could have ironed out your fly shop guy in short order.

She got caught in a speed trap in Busti doing 42 in a 35 mph zone. She got so PO'd that she ran over the cop's foot as she put the car in gear to go once the business was finished. Just his toes though. Cracked him up and he rescinded the ticket wrote her a warning instead. We could see him laughing for as long as he stayed in view as we drove away. This was a long time ago. Johnson or maybe it was Grant was President...
