Last time I was out in Centre county I did check out a couple of Class A brookie streams but was overall kinda dissapointed. I mean I caught fish and all and enjoyed myself, but I've fished much better non-class A's(not in Centre though). I totally understand that the populations fluctuate though, and it's probably been a while since a lot of these streams have been surveyed. The brookie fishing I do do this time around I think I'll just pick some random blue lines in a likely brookie area and explore a little. That's more fun anyways.

I also want to check out some of the Class A brownie streams around State College though(I assume these are mostly limestoners, especially the ones in the Spring Creek watershed?)

Yep. For trout(except steelhead) I find myself fishing in PA most weekends. This weekend I'm planning on fishing(if it's not blow out) one of Ohio's BEST trout streams, and it's still not all that great at least compared to PA streams. The non-resident license is well worth the money, and I'm fortunate to live within an hour of a bunch of decent stocked streams, and not all that far from wild streams.
