I've got no problem with those that are into it.

Personally, I'm not all that interested. Largely because I don't think I'd be very good at it, lol. And I'm not really interested in being good at it either, as it tests different skills than the ones I find most important and interesting.

I am typically more interested in where and when, than how. So, here's the deal. I'm designing a competition I'd actually have some interest in. Anglers will be pitted against other anglers of roughly the same skill level, i.e. if they fished side by side they'd do similarly. All anglers must use the exact same fly, to be provided for you the morning of. Same rod and leader set up. Same amount of weight. We'd prefer if you all used the same techniques too. We're trying to eliminate anything that could be considered "on stream skill" as a variable. This competition is about choosing where and when.

You have 2 days total. You can choose to fish whenever and wherever you want during that time, cept you are not allowed to fish between 10 p.m. and 4 a.m. You start from this spot this morning and have to be back here tomorrow night, where you go in between is your business. Hiking/driving time merely takes away from fishing time, but is allowed. Scoring is similar to other comps, except that stocked fish don't count, and brookies length gets multiplied by 1.3 to put them on an even scale with browns (an average brookie should get as many points as an average brown).

That, I might do.
