Subject: : Conservation
Topic: : Did I do the right or wrong thing Re: conservation
Re: Did I do the right or wrong thing Re: conservation
Author: : Ard
Date: : 2013/12/7 3:28:10
URL:

The issue may be whether or not they had the proper permitting / green lighting to work in such close proximity to your waterway. Whether or not the equipment entered the stream channel or not may also come into play.

You have a Soil Conservation District where you live. Look this office up also and call there. Try to make an appointment to meet with the person who works your district and if nothing else begin a relationship.

What you need in Pennsylvania is a 'Green Belt' law to be introduced in the state house. This would limit development right to the waters edge.

I was active with conservation efforts when I lived in Lycoming County. I am here in Alaska, each year I build my network with the Federal & State agency's and become more involved here in the Mat Su Valley with our conservation efforts.

If you want to make a difference it will take time & effort. You will need friends, so if you have never read Dale Carnegie's book How to Win Friends and Influence People, I would highly recommend it. I am very serious about that. I worked for the National clean Air collation and The National Audubon Society for 4 years as a legislative liaison and if I learned anything at all it is this; If those people holding the power to help you & your cause don't like you,.... you are wasting your time and breath.

I feel your concern for this little gem that you've come to enjoy and I can imagine your sadness at what you see happening. I am just saying that if you want to help to change the way things are going there, you must use your head.

Ard