

Subject: : Conservation

Topic: : Blue Herons

Re: Blue Herons

Author: : fly_doggie

Date: : 2009/8/25 19:30:55

URL:

It is unfortunate that some people's idea of wildlife management is to manage a particular species for man's own peculiar benefit (deer, trout, etc.). If there's anything we've learned over the last 40 years is that nature can be very resilient if given a chance but it is an ecosystem. It takes all the critters big & small together to achieve this. The herons (and other species) are just following their biological imperative. I will stop and watch a heron stalk a fish or an osprey dive for a fish. I don't begrudge them a thing. I'm thankful we can still enjoy it. It just isn't the fishing or the hunting, it's the experience.