Thanks for the conversation, guys :) I wasn't trying to start a big rumble, I had just been thinking about how come I never wanted to go to the LittleJ anymore. And just for the record, I released 5 fish yesterday!

"I do not generally kill trout. I do feel, however, that I am obliged to eat one meal of trout per year. Not gonna lie to ya, that meal is often either wild or holdover trout."

Funny, that's kinda how I do it too :)

"But I also understand these is a blood sports. Without them, it is just a walk in the woods (which I also enjoy for the same reasons)."

An old friend of mine refers to grouse hunting as "taking the guns for a walk" - referring to our success rate, I suppose. I like walking too, but hunting is different, at least in theory.

"look im not saying the occasional harvest of a wild trout is wrong or bad. i dont do it....never will. just dont label me in YOUR book. we all dont "really" fish to eat. thats NOT why i do it."

Sorry, I didn't mean that. I only meant that fishing was developed as a means of subsistence, and people started to fly fish just 'cause it worked better. I don't fish primarily for food either - if I did, I'd be in trouble!

Now, I should figure out how to quote properly on this forum ...
