I just wanted to issue a please refrain from fishing the Yough trout statement until we get some cooler water temps. As of right now, I'm putting my trout trips on hold until things cool down a bit. We really have a nice bunch of residents in the river right now, but it won't take a whole lot of fishing them with these warm temps to put a solid dent the population.

The forecast looks good with regard to air temps starting tomorrow, so perhaps the water temps will provide for some trouting below the Casselman by the weekend. And with any luck we'll get some cold rain to accompany the predicted overnight lows. Keep your fingers crossed and chase some bass until things shape up for noidal pursuits.

Thanks and have fun out there.
