On SRC, a topic in which I've never really paid much attention coming too late to the site to really get involved...

On this URL, http://www.springridgeclubs.com/about...on\_spring\_ridge\_club.html there's a few paragraphs that really make me pause. Specifically, teh first four, the story of Donny's youth, I guess.

Its very interesting to see him basically referring to the 2000 acres of his family as their private fiefdom, and then essentially stating control over an additional 15K neighbouring acres due to the fact that no one else had the money to buy a 4x4 to access it, ending in the, self-stated, "bitter" statement that the government robbed him of his land to create a lake for all to use.

What an insight to the person that is Donny Beaver. How it seems that this whole thing stems from him having his toys taken away when he was a young man.

Anyways, this isn't the place for this debate, I guess, although "debates" seem to spring up all over this board sometimes. I'd just gone to the site looking for information regarding Joe Humphreys and SRC, and I found that an interesting little read.

First I'll admit I know very little about SRC and the "Beav". But reading from the link above. It appears he came from a wealthy land owning family and when starting out he ment well.

From the posts on this site I think he went astray somewhere.

Preserving land is a good thing. Charging folks to use it is a business.
