

Subject: : Tips and Tricks

Topic: : Nymphing without indicators

Re: Nymphing without indicators

Author: : tomgamber

Date: : 2007/5/18 13:42:13

URL:

Quote:

thedude1534 wrote:

when you use this sixth sense, are you setting the hook in an area that you "feel" would have trout. For example, if you are fishing a riffle-pool area, do you set the hook right where the riffle meets the pool (thats where I get a lot of takes) even if there is no indication of a strike. I find myself doing that even with an indicator.

I use more of a lift than a set like you think of tv bass guys. I have lifted, felt nothing and let it drop back and got a hit immediately because that lift may have triggered a strike. If you "set" the hook, you may break some off or miss chances by pulling it clear out of the water. Sometimes you just lift for no reason and that fish is there. That's when you get to make jokes about a sixth sense.