

Subject: : Tips and Tricks

Topic: : Nymphing without indicators

Re: Nymphing without indicators

Author: : Wulff-Man

Date: : 2007/5/18 14:04:02

URL:

A while back someone posted video clips of some guy who took underwater video while others were fly fishing. The one showed that trout often take and spit out nymphs without it being detected at all. This may be one reason that setting the hook periodically will catch some fish without any sign that they took the fly. It can be just a matter of odds. Not to downplay the skills of you guys, who are much more skilled nymphers than I am. There's certainly a lot of experience, knowledge, feel, etc. that goes into it too. Just bringing this up as another piece of the puzzle that might help.