

Subject: : Tips and Tricks

Topic: : Nymphing without indicators

Re: Nymphing without indicators

Author: : thedude1534

Date: : 2007/5/18 17:09:15

URL:

Well, all this talk about nymphing got me all ancy, so I ducked out of work for a couple hours this afternoon and got on the Brandywine. Fished it from 2:30 to 4, nymphing without an indicator. I took my leader down to 7 ft and used the fly line as an indicator.

I managed to get 3 browns and a few chubs in that timeframe. It actually seemed to be easier than using a yarn indicator. On several of those strikes, I was setting the hook by the intuitive "feel" or sixth sense thing. Also, when I say set the hook, I mean a quick, short raise of the rod tip, not the BOOYAH! type meat-head jerk that pro bass anglers do.

I'm back at work now, my boss asked where I went and I said I had to run an errand I forgot about.....definition of flyfishing addiction....