In answer to my own question, I do use beadheads with wild trout from time to time, but I now tie them myself. I use either the copper ones if I'm tying pheasant tails or brown stones, and the black ones if I'm tying hares ears, black stones, or scuds. I have luck using them with wild trout, but I will never use the shiney gold brass ones, because I believe they take away from the realistic look of the nymph. At least for wild browns, I have never had luck with the gold shiney ones. Maybe if I fished more brookies I wouldn't have to worry about the trout being so picky.
