Finally someone agrees with me that the fins can grow back. I'm sure its not true in all cases though but they can grow back. I was looking through some of my pictures of the brown trout I've caught and most of mine do have that blue spot or a faint blue spot behind the eye. Even the real pale ones I've caughten out of Spring Creek seem to have it but I also noticed in a few of the pictures that I know are stocked browns seem to have a dark spot but its black and the ones that I know are wild fish it seems to be more blue or blackish blue.

If a golden rainbow reproduces their young would just be rainbows right since thats really what they would have been without the fish commission playing the mad evil scientist or would their eggs be steral and not hatch like a hybrid? I know Fishing Creek can have wild rainbows especially on the stretch from Cedar Run to the 220 bridge.
