That could have very well been us. Quite honestly, I can't remember the exact days, but Tuesday/Wednesday does sound familiar. There were some spincasters aside of us I think a few of them even had luck with the specks.

I didn't figure out the "go to" fly until the last day, end of fishing. I had all the 'essential' OBX flies (black/orange Clousers, etc.), but really started to get strikes on a gray/white Clouser. Live and learn!

This was my first year "on the fly" in the OBX and I didn't fish anywhere other than Oregon Inlet. The bugs were too bad to fish behind Bodie and I just threw in the towel.

I'm definitely planning on going the kayak route next year when we go down. I'll be able to cover much more water and hopefully make it more productive!

I've never fished the south side of the bridge, but read that wading can be treacherous. Lots of steep drop-offs!

Tight lines...
