

Subject: : Warm Water & Salt Water Fly-Fishing

Topic: : Calling salt "fin"attics

Re: Calling salt "fin"attics

Author: : Fishidiot

Date: : 2009/11/14 17:27:27

URL:

As an avid kayak fisherman I've been at it for a few years but have always owned narrow "touring" type boats with sit-in cockpits. These boats are impossible to stand up in unless very wide. My preference with kayak fishing is to paddle then get out and wade anyway. I do have outriggers which can be attached to my boat and this will stabilize it enough for standing (just barely) but I rarely use the pontoons in flowing water and find they're more trouble than they're worth. I can stand up in my canoe for short periods if I'm careful. The kayaks typically used in FL and off the CA coast are sit on top design and typically wider and more stable and can be fished standing up but it's a wobbly game. Pete41 is an avid "yakker" and may chime in on this thread.