They are probably decendents of trout from past stockings that were in the stream long enough to spawn and reprodcue to a certain degrees, I knw in my home watershed I see 2 distinct strains 1 very colorful and 1 that is very silvery, the stream hasn't been stocked since the 70's so they are not stocked fish that reprodcued recently. But with the heavy stocking of the past a few fish may have reproduced and been successful at it, which is not very common at all. I still think that fish that guys call holdovers aren't really holdovers at all but a few wild fish that inhabitat our some marginal streams.
