

Subject: : Fly Tying

Topic: : wanted: simple green drakes

Re: wanted: simple green drakes

Author: : Red_headed_Stranger

Date: : 2007/5/31 11:24:14

URL:

Yeah the same ones tied in as a tail are palmered forward. No dubbing used. I guess palmered isn't a great term because you need to make the wraps much tighter than you would normally palmer a fly. Like I said I have never used it, but an older gentlemen that taught it to me said that is all he uses for the drake hatch. It is definitely much darker looking than an eastern green drake. I'm assuming you can clip the bottom portion of the hackle to make it ride a little lower. He said he also uses oversized hackle as well.