

---

Subject: : Gear Talk

Topic: : BlueSky Furled Leaders

Re: BlueSky Furled Leaders

Author: : AugustWest

Date: : 2007/6/8 11:14:34

URL:

I use the Blue Sky furled leaders. You need to tie an 8" or so extender on the tippet end of the leader so you can then attach whatever tippet material you want. Tie a surgeon's loop on the end of the extender and then loop-to-loop it with the tiny loop on the end of the leader. It's a little tricky but not horrible. Patience!

I have never tried the Feathercraft brand though the notion of the tiny metal ring would make the attachment easier. I would like to see one

I would suggest not tying a clinch knot thru the tiny loop of the Blue Sky brand. I have seen the clinch knot eventually slice thru the loop. I have tied a nail knot for the extender ignoring the tiny loop and that has worked flawlessly.

These leaders turn over like a dream, are soft and land beautifully, tend not to pick up water or splash on pick up and last forever. I just replace one I used for 3 years because it looked a little frayed. I have one on every reel and spool I own.

Hope that helps.