The best line for roll casting hands down is the Wulff Triangle Taper. The front "taper" is about 27 feet long and it is one continuous taper slightly decreasing in diameter from that point to the tip. The theory is heavier line is always turning over lighter line.

Some weight forward lines have a tip, front taper, short belly and then a gradual rear taper before getting to the running line. Once you extend into the rear taper roll casting will be not be as easy simply because lighter line is now trying to turn over heavier line.

As far as backing, if the reel can take backing put it on even if you will never use it. The backing increases the diameter of the reel and will help minimize line coils.
