Two comments here, first off, if you write non sense no one can understand, it apparently gets a lot of attention. Second off, TB, a guy I know at work has some info on the guy who used to feed the deer, send me a PM, reminding me to ask, and I will get his name and where he fed the deer. I know he has a picture hanging in his office and if he cannot answer my questions I know someone who can. I could probably find more on the history of the area and logging, ut it will take more time, also specifics may be harder to come by.

As for Kettle Creek, I live twenty minutes away and don't waste my time on most of it. It is a great distraction for people from downstate who want to chase stockies, even cross fork is going that way with increased stocking. The Hammersly is overrated, you can drive half way up it and people four wheel, illegally, all over the entire wild area including throughout the stream bottoms.
