I know what you are saying ryan...I watched this really great documentary on the ANWAR last night...not because i've made up my mind on the issue but because it was really well shot and well put together. (that and the cat was mesmerized by the sounds) anyway, It was rather one sided as many documentaries are. Mostly because they need funded and you can't fence sit and collect money from both sides of an issue. It doesn't happen. The point is...Wmass used an article to back up his point...Frankly, I didn't even read the article. I read his statement and I didn't care what the article said because he'd already gotten his point across to me.

This thought really troubles me

..."I would personally kill every brook trout in Pennsylvania and protected cutthroat in Yellowstone if it guaranteed that my family would forever be safe from a suicide bomber."

While I agree with the emotion and sentiment of the comment it begs the question...What the hell are we fighting and dieing for if we are willing to have nothing and just exist?
