WMass,

We are clearly at different ends of the spectrum and will never come to understand each others points of view however... i did read your whole article.

I don't agree with what happened in Klamath. I simply said the statements were misleading. If you want my opinion Cheney sould have told the farmers to go pound sand. I don't want the government subsudizing ANY industry. Also they sould not now be subsidizing the Fishing people. Raise the price of salmon to reflect the disaster.

As far as the urban sprawl goes.. I am on both sides of that issue. Who is the government to tell a man where he can live? Yet really good planning and zoning accomplishes this, people are hapy and comunities may be built sustainably.

Tom,

I am troubled too. Its very sad but we are in dire straights.

Our way of life is unique in this country. There is a lot of bad but there is way more good. When the feces hits the fan nobody is really going to care about this stuff anyhow. What is it? Maslow's hiearchy of needs... Thank God the three of us can sit here (at work) and debate this.
