

---

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : To count or not to count- that is the question.

Re: To count or not to count- that is the question.

Author: : pcray1231

Date: : 2010/2/11 10:16:09

URL:

Quote:

What are your thoughts on fish counting?
Does this effect your outing?
Do you ever move spots?
How quickly does it take you to decide this?

1. I'm a counter. I do sometimes lose track on a good day when there's no feeling of competition at all. But then I generally estimate at the end of the day anyway. I think its cause I'm competitive. Either friendly competitive between friends or family, or often competitive against myself (a previous outing or whatever). Opening day, with my brother and dad, is always the most competitive day. There's usually a case of beer or a bottle of Jack riding on it.
2. Not really. I guess it makes good days more enjoyable when you know how it stands against the "average" day, but I still enjoy the bad days.
3. Yes. Lookin for that optimal combination of good surroundings, lots of fish, and less people.
4. Depends on the day, my mood, etc. But with maybe the exception of Erie steel, I'm a mover, and can't bring myself to fish one place to oblivion. Even if I'm not moving distances, I'll go back and forth over the same area. Thats just the way I'm more comfortable fishing.