

---

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : The future of fly-fishing

Re: The future of fly-fishing

Author: : Chaz

Date: : 2010/2/15 15:36:49

URL:

I actually don't have a problem with Orvis promoting their "Resorts." The owners pay big money to become an Orvis resort or camp or whatever they call them. Orvis should promote them. But Fly-fishing magazines promoting them is another issue. Especially when they mix an ADVERTISEMENT in as a magazine article. And actually over the last 10-12 years this is the way the media is operating. Don't expect that to change any time soon.

The thing that can be done, and should be done is for PFBC to start making some agreements with some of these types of places and open them to the general public. They should have a stream access fund for just this type of thing. To help support the program they could charge a minimal fee for fishing for the day, this way they raise funds and control how many anglers are on the water.

The key is it is controlled. We wouldn't have to go crazy with it but on a prime water and location I think a rational way to acquire access permanently.