Marcellus is a very broad topic and you might want to narrow it down, say to just PA. And it depends on how big a research paper it is, not to mention the political leanings of your professor (that is not as irrelevant as you might at first think).

I don't have a link at the moment, but it would be easy enough to get: PA DEP's Oil and Gas section. Anyone wanting a permit to drill has to apply and there are forms to fill out and background information to understand, including relevant regulations. Those establish some semblance of a basis from which to do analysis. They are "official" documents which are good to be able to cite and it's nice to have something other than opinionated bluster from one side or the other to use.

Good luck in your studies. A poor economy is a good time to be in school.
