I think there are still two arguable points in the Global Warming debate:

1. whether man is causing it or whether it is a natural phenomenon; and
2. whether (if it is natural) it is a cyclical phenomenon, that will reverse or correct itself in time, or is it linear, bound to continue to move in the direction it has been moving in the modern era.

Even if it is occurring naturally, if we can take some action to lessen or slow down its negative impact, we should.
