Another great discussion.

Even when practicing dead drift, one should allow a caddis dry to "skate" a little bit at the end of the drift. Most of us have figured out that this works by accident.

I started out thinking the proper way to fish dry flies was to impart movement on the fly. But I'm self taught, and learned how on farm ponds for bluegills and bass. I continued that wneh i started fly fishing for trout. Then I read I was doing it wrong. silly me. 😊

There is no wrong way as long as you are catching fish. Mix it up if you are not catching any.
