FarmerDave.....i don't know about wool but i know that z-lon wings on a caddis get caught in the teeth and also the ultra chennille used in san juan worms , marabou in wooly buggers , i think sometimes it just gets delayed there long enough for us to set the hook , i also agree that caddis and stonefly imitations are more often the way to go. The books tend to concentrate on the mayflies but how often do we really get to fish a for real mayfly hatch? My all time go to fly in warm weather is a foam ant imitation in black.
