Thanks for the suggestions guys! I am already looking at these and thinking about what I don't have in my fly box. I have been tying since last year so I am still pretty new to it. I (like I am sure most new tiers do) have a lot of Buggers in my fly box, they are easy to tie, effective and easy to fish! I am going to look up some of these patterns in my book and do a little materials shopping I think! It is funny that two of you guys mentioned San Juan worms.... I have never tied or fished one, and it is such an easy pattern!! Do you guys use split shot with them? I don't recall the pattern being weighted when I looked at it last.
