I like that pattern you posted Festus... I love those simple ties. Now in reference to the mono... what would be the advantage of adding shot to that compared to a bead head or shot a few inches up on the tippet?

According to the guy that posted this pattern, the shot attached to the mono allows the fly to drift with the head in the upright position with the tail facing down. According to him and several others that fish this pattern, this is a more realistic posture. Whether that's true or not, I don't know. But I intend to find out later on today 😊
