I love the diversity of people on this site... we all have our own prospective on things. There's the new generation in their 20's and 30's that likes lightweight graphite rods in all the name brands for anything to little brookie stream 2wts to 6wt streamer chuckers and then as we think that's the way this thread is going bikerfish chimes in with his old school fiberglass suggestion. I don't think this is a bad thing at all. It shows the diversity of this site which covers the diversity of the sport. We all have a difference of opinion and all give good advice, but to each his own!
