

Subject: : Beginner Forum

Topic: : Dry Fly Fishing Tips

Re: Dry Fly Fishing Tips

Author: : pcray1231

Date: : 2010/3/29 15:25:26

URL:

I will also add that I disagree with being primarily wild trout streams. In my experience, stocked trout are rising more often than their wild counterparts. But its a more steady thing with stockers, they're rising more often, but they don't get as frenzied in a big hatch situation. Wild trout rising is more of a boom/bust thing, but of course you can somewhat predict the booms. I guess the way to explain it is that wild trout are more in tune with the natural cycles and respond accordingly, while stockers are generally opportunistic and not set on cycles. Just my experiences, your mileage may vary.

Of course, as was said, the longer a stocker is in the water, the more like a wild trout they become.

Good stuff either way.