I'm almost embarrassed to admit that I have never dry fly fished. I'm going to give it a try this year for sure. Can't wait to get that first fish on a dry. I have always just used nymphs if the fish didn't want steak(flesh fly) and eggs. Good idea for a topic.

I'm going to assume that slower water is better for dries than fast water. Or are they both just as productive?

Would you fish deep water that is really clear with a dry if you didn't see any risers or would you be wasting your time?

I'm here to steal your knowledge:) Fishing PA waters is going to be a fun learning experience
