VG suggestions so far.

Something I have noted is use a limp/soft (albeit strong) tippet. Those rubbery mouths are might sensitive.

They'll spit it out quick if they feel something that isn't foodlike.

I've got a spot where they will cruise in by the dozens right at dusk and feed in the shallow flats. It's just fun watching all the wakes as they make their way from the deep.

I would follow Akid's advice on Chartiers...he's probably logged more time there than all other anglers combined over the past couple years (which isn't really all that much, though!)
