

Subject: : Fly Tying

Topic: : Humpinator recipe

Re: Humpinator recipe

Author: : Padraic

Date: : 2007/7/31 19:27:07

URL:

Quote:

jaybo41 wrote:

Quote:

IMHO - this is a cheap excuse to pat oneself on the back. We only have someone's word for the fact that they came up with anything more than a nifty name for a fly. Even if they did come up with a pattern, so what? I have a couple patterns I dreamed up and they work. I don't really believe in "magic" patterns. I think you need a fly that is the right size/color but after that, I am much more convinced that presentation is important.

Excellent points. And if this is so top secret, why even mention it beyond the "in crowd".

Because it's a hoax, like crop circles. They build up a mystique around this pattern by showing a few fish caught. They make a big deal about some magic fly, so that people talk about their awesome pattern. It's a Sanjaya moment! All hype; no talent!! I say the humpinator doesn't exist. If does, a decent fisherman (with working legs) could find a pattern in a standard box that would outfish it on any given day.