When you say easy to open, how do you open them?

If you open the shot a bit wider than they come before use, it makes it easier to open the second time. To open them, I just push my thumbnail into the hollow on the slot side, and they open right up. Just push your nail straight into the slot. My hemostats (Dr. Slicks) also have a screwdriver blade on the outside of the finger loop that works also.

This works well on the Dinsmore shot, as they're not as soft as lead. The green ones are coated with a plastic that grips the tippet, and helps reduce damage to the tippet as well.
