Fool, I agree. Shebop - you are out of line. I am basing my suggestions on my lifelong relationship with Scott rods. I'll personally call the people I know there and it won't be a problem. You are out of line. It would cost them a fraction of the cost of a new rod to fix most problems and they would be happy to do that - for anyone! b/c the name of the game for them is marketing. The rod market is VERY competitive - customer service is the backbone of their existence at this point.

If you want to stay on your high horse and keep throwing the "fraud" card out there that is fine with me. I was just stating my experience in the buisness. If someone choses to not believe me or doesn't want to do business based on that, fine with me...
