As you spend time on the water, keep your eyes open and observe. I agree w/ fishidiot on the general premis. You will eventually learn what bugs are on the waters you like to fish. A little reading or asking a few questions will help you figure out when specific bugs hatch. If you are there when everything "comes together", it improves your chances of having a banner day. Like tom said, I just get out when I can and that's not much anymore. Spend as much time as you can out there, keep your eyes open... they won't lie to you. I still probably spend more time observing than I do actually casting the rod.
