As with GW, delaying slightly before setting is my default hook-setting method. When I continue to miss fish, I speed up or delay the set a little more to find what works. I watched the fish a Valley feed on top. There at times (most times) where they quickly snatch the fly on the surface and return to their position. They will reject it in an instant. In that case a quick set may be needed. The best advice is to try to read what is happening that day and adjust your set to the situation.
