Lots of times "misses" are the fish refusing the fly at the last second. Just like when they follow a spinner then just bump it, never actually even opening their mouth. The past couple of weeks I've had trout hit my fly and I've set the hook and hook them in the belly. Funny foul-hooking them with dries. But I think they were refusing it at the last second but I still stuck'em.

Could be the hook gap, style, or shape. Or could just be missing them. But I think 0 for 7 on hook-sets, something is going on.
