What's boring about it?

Nymphing is where it's at for excitement. The take is less spectacular, but everything leading up to it is superior IMO.

If searching with dries was more effective, I'd probably prefer that. Covering tons of water looking for a surprise is what does it for me. This is why I switch to terrestrials when it's time.

Get the same thing tossing a dry to likely places, too. Tossing it long distances, under trees and over rocks. Making it efficiently coast down stream and a twitch before it takes off. Waiting for the moment that out of nowhere something smashes it from the bottom makes it all the more interesting, as well.

Nymphing is either watching your bobber lull along the water, or staring intently at a string hoping it moves funny. It appears to work best when you just sort of flop it into the water 5' off the rod tip, too. God knows, it works, I managed four fish in one pool thought it was pretty fun for a minute, moved up stream and then cut it off because it was boring.
