I think at this point anything is worth trying.

You do realize it is possible to make this worse, much worse, right? You better be dang sure it's going to work if you try anything that risks making a bigger hole. As it is, the relief well may be months off, but it is sure to work. If you blow that hole open so that it comes from the ground, and not just the pipe, then you might endanger the relief well and have a spill that will go on for decades instead of months.

It's not easy to do things a mile deep. Really, its not. I want something to be done too and am watching this horrible event unfold. But you can't just scream for SOMETHING to be done unless you have a better idea.
