

---

Subject: : Gear Talk

Topic: : silk fly line

Re: silk fly line

Author: : David

Date: : 2010/6/10 14:08:51

URL:

Quote:

sight_nymph_17109 wrote:

David,

Come on. Aren't you twisting what I'm saying? What I said was that I'd fish with anyone unless it was one of those "bamboo only purists d-bags". Well, on closer inspection, looks like you are right. Give yourself a smiley face sticker champ.

Allow me to reply to the person looking for advice.... I've never used a silk line. Based on that, I'm not in a position to provide any useful information for you at this time regarding silk lines. I understand silk line to be fairly expensive and higher level of care is required when comparing it to current PVC products on the market. Based on technology, I'd stick with the current synthetic fly lines on the market. They are offered in various tapers that will allow you to match the conditions and feel that you are looking for. Thanks for your understanding and always buy American made fishing products.

See, don't you feel better after giving legitimate advice??? I'll give myself a smiley sticker...and I give one to you, as well!